DOCTOR WHO

When the elegant Jon Pertwee (above) landed on the planet Spiridon in 1973, it marked the start of a classic six-part Doctor Who adventure, Planet of the Daleks, written by Terry Nation, and repeated from Friday on BBC1 as part of the Doctor's 30th anniversary celebrations.

The 1972 - 73 series, which conjured up Ogrons, Sea Devils, the Master, giant green maggots and, of course, the Daleks, also heralded the departure of Katy Manning as assistant Jo Grant. "When I went to the audition I was just one of a crowd," she says. "But I screamed, freaked out and got the job."

Doctor Who and the Daleks Friday 7.30pm BBC1, 5.30pm BBC2 in Scotland, 10.35pm Northern Ireland

Doctor Who and the Masque of Mandragora Sunday 10.00am UK Gold

Doctor Who: The Dead Planet Monday - Friday UK Gold (times vary)

Planet of the Daleks

Jon Pertwee and Katy Manning (as Jo Grant) were at the helm of the Tardis during the 1972/73 series from which this six-part Terry Nation adventure is taken, showing from this week as part of the celebrations of Doctor Who's 30th birthday.

Pertwee had already had one clash with the Daleks. But the actor himself was not greatly enamoured of his metal opponents. "I think the Daleks are boring," he said.

"But people love them so I suppose I'm wrong."

Terry Nation, however, had good reason to disagree. He created the Daleks in 1963 for the second Doctor Who story as "hideous machine-like creatures . . . legless . . . with no human features". Designer Ray Cusick thought up the famous "pepperpot" look. "But," said Nation, "their continued existence meant that I found it impossible to write another successful monster for Doctor Who."

The Tardis lands on a strange planet with the Doctor unconscious, and Jo faces the dangers of an alien jungle.
